April 2018

Dear Yale Graduate,

The Yale Corporation—the university’s board of trustees—plays a vital role in supporting Yale’s mission, progress toward its strategic goals, and continued excellence as the global research university most committed to teaching and learning. Each year, one of the board’s six alumni fellows retires, and you and your fellow graduates share the responsibility of electing a new fellow for a term of six years.

I encourage you to read the following materials carefully, and then to cast your vote for one of the candidates. Each of these impressive individuals would contribute an important set of experiences and skills to Yale’s endeavors.

Sincerely,

Peter Salovey
President
Chris Argyris Professor of Psychology
It is my pleasure to invite you to vote in this year’s Yale Corporation Alumni Fellow Election, which will determine the next alumni fellow of the university’s board of trustees. The individual receiving the highest number of votes will fill the vacancy created by Kevin P. Ryan ’85 B.A., whose service as alumni fellow concludes on June 30, 2018. The elected candidate will begin a six-year term on July 1, 2018.

The Standing Committee for the Nomination of Alumni Fellows of the Association of Yale Alumni nominates exceptional leaders with the knowledge and skills to serve the Corporation’s governing and advisory activities in support of Yale’s mission. To create diverse and well-balanced leadership, the committee is attentive to identifying individuals whose expertise and experience complement those of current trustees. After soliciting nominations from a wide-ranging pool of alumni and university leaders, the committee has selected the following:

DAVID AGARD ’75 B.S.
Burlingame, CA

MICHAEL WARREN ’90 B.A.
Washington, D.C.

Biographies of each candidate, along with those of the current trustees, are included in the voting materials.

All graduates of Yale College who have held their degrees for five years or more, all alumni of the graduate and professional schools, and all recipients of Yale honorary degrees are eligible to vote in the election. The polls close at 11:59 p.m. ET on May 20, 2018. As in past years, Election Services Corporation of Ronkonkoma, New York, is tabulating the votes and will record only one vote per person.
As you cast your ballot, please consider providing the committee with suggestions for other graduates who should be considered for future elections. Nominations may be submitted at http://www.aya.yale.edu/content/nomination-1.

By order of the Corporation:

Kimberly M. Goff-Crews
Secretary
New Haven, April 2018
THE YALE CORPORATION

The Yale Corporation, or board of trustees, is the university’s principal governing body. The trustees act as fiduciaries to ensure that Yale’s academic and administrative leadership are guided by sound policies and practices, and equipped with adequate resources, to further Yale’s mission. In this work, the trustees balance the needs of today’s faculty, students, alumni, and staff with those of future generations.

The Corporation has seventeen regular members: the president of the university, who chairs the board; ten appointed successor trustees, each limited to two six-year terms; and six elected alumni fellows, chosen by alumni for staggered six-year terms. Successor trustees and alumni fellows carry the same responsibilities and duties. In addition, the governor and lieutenant governor of Connecticut are board members ex officio. The Corporation has twelve standing committees with responsibilities outlined in the by-laws.

The Corporation convenes in person at least five times a year to review and discuss issues with Yale’s academic and administrative leaders, and to vote on matters such as faculty and senior leadership appointments, the conferral of degrees, major building projects, and operating and capital budgets. During and between meetings, trustees consider issues of strategic importance, offer guidance, and gather information that supports the stewardship of the university.

While on campus, the trustees meet with members of the Yale community, including faculty, staff, and students. Some meet formally, in regular meetings with student government and faculty; and others informally, at lunches, university teas, and campus events. Off campus, trustees represent the university at events and engage on issues of importance to Yale and higher education in general.
Mission Statement
Yale is committed to improving the world today and for future generations through outstanding research and scholarship, education, preservation, and practice. Yale educates aspiring leaders worldwide who serve all sectors of society. We carry out this mission through the free exchange of ideas in an ethical, interdependent, and diverse community of faculty, staff, students, and alumni.

Strategic Goals for the University
https://president.yale.edu/goals
When David Agard was considering colleges in the early 1970s, Yale emerged as a “unique and perfect fit.” It was, at the time, the only institution in the country to offer an undergraduate major in Agard’s chosen field, molecular biophysics and biochemistry. Today, closing in on a half-century later, Agard is a scholarly and strategic leader in the subject that first drew him to New Haven, and he is eager to bring his experience and insights to bear on Yale’s continued development as a global research university.

Agard, who completed his Ph.D. in biological chemistry at the California Institute of Technology in 1980, is a professor and Howard Hughes Medical Institute investigator at the University of California, San Francisco (UCSF), where he oversees a lab that researches the molecular machinery responsible for cellular function. Throughout his career, he has devoted himself to teaching and mentoring rising scientists, all the while embracing the responsibilities of academic leadership. For thirteen years, he directed and built up the university’s graduate program in biophysics, driven by “feeling very strongly about the importance of training the next generation, especially in multi-disciplinary science.” He was also on the executive committee of the UCSF Graduate Programs in Biological Sciences, helping oversee graduate education in the basic sciences. In 2000 he spearheaded the creation of the University of California’s multi-campus Institute for Bioengineering, Biotechnology, and Quantitative Biomedical Research (QB3), a hybrid research institute and startup accelerator, becoming its founding director and later UCSF’s scientific director. He was also a member of the University of California Office of Research Science and Technology Panel, providing oversight to the Department of Energy’s National Laboratories. Reflecting his “strong technology bent” and a commitment “to developing technology, not just utilizing it,” Agard helped develop the first electron counting camera for cryo-electron microscopes (cryoEM) and now serves on the Life Sciences Advisory Board of FEI/ThermoFisher, the maker of cryoEMs.

Among his many professional distinctions, Agard was elected to the National Academy of Sciences in 2007 and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences two years later. He received an excellence in teaching award from the Haile T. Debas Academy of Medical Educators in 2006, and was honored with the QB3 award in quantitative bioscience in 2015.

Returning to campus last year after joining the University Council, Agard was struck anew by the transformation of New Haven since his undergraduate days. One thing that has not changed, however, is the “extraordinary experience” of being at Yale, “in an environment so conducive to exploration.” As a student in Davenport College, Agard would spend his breaks from coursework marveling at the university’s museums and reveling in Yale’s theater and musical performances. Now, as an alumnus, he always makes time to revisit the collections of the Yale University Art Gallery.

Agard’s appreciation for the arts extends beyond spectatorship, into practice: he is a ceramicist by hobby, sculpting bowls that he finishes with unusual glazes and textures. The craft, he explains, has “a complementarity with science,” allowing physical as well as cerebral expression.

Stepping outdoors, Agard and his wife, Dr. Lisa McConlogue, recently developed a passion for an entirely different kind of pastime. For a solar eclipse-viewing trip to Micronesia in 2016, the couple became certified in scuba diving. They “fell in love with it” and have been focusing on scuba-oriented travel ever since. For Agard, the pursuit is not only a way to engage with the natural world—it is a reminder that, at any point in life, we can always learn something new.
For Michael Warren, Yale's dedication “to improving the world today and for future generations” is more than an institutional mission statement—it’s a way of life. In the two decades since his graduation, he has built a career as a leader in financial services, international business, and government policy, but he also has kept his sights firmly on public service.

As global managing director of Albright Stonebridge Group—a business strategy firm he co-founded in 2009 after working at McKinsey & Company—Warren advises clients “at the intersection of the public, private, and social sectors.” Throughout this work, Warren sees an underlying thread that resonates with his values, describing the firm’s “mission-oriented focus on making the world a better place, on driving commercial and public policy changes that improve people’s lives.”

Warren, a longtime resident of Washington, D.C., is known for his engagement in local and national service. In the Clinton administration, he was executive director of the National Economic Council at the White House and served in the Office of the Secretary of the U.S. Department of Labor. During the first term of Barack Obama’s presidency, he became senior advisor in the White House Presidential Personnel Office, overseeing appointments for government economic agencies. He also was appointed by President Obama to the Overseas Private Investment Corporation (OPIC) Board of Directors, and currently is chair of the OPIC Audit Committee. Among his most meaningful accomplishments, he cites his work as a trustee of the District of Columbia Retirement Board (the district’s public pension fund), whose investment committee he chairs. “Our pensions—for our district’s police, teachers, firefighters—are fully funded,” he says, further explaining that Washington, D.C.’s public pension fund is one of a few in the United States to have achieved this goal.
Warren also finds ample time to give back to the alma mater that, he says, “gave so much to me and inspired me to make a difference in the world.” He is a member of the University Council, the President’s Council on International Activities, and the School of Management Board of Advisors. He finds inspiration in collaborating with fellow alumni, members of the faculty, and Yale’s leadership. And he takes energy from “being able to contribute to the forward progress of the university”—from the conviction that, Yale’s success notwithstanding, “our best work is ahead of us.” Of the Yale Corporation, he remarked, “I’m excited to jump in and be helpful—to faithfully represent Yale’s alumni in supporting the mission and aspirations of the university.”

In his student days, Warren soaked up every facet of the undergraduate experience, majoring in history, captaining the men’s track team, and volunteering as a tutor at Wilbur Cross High School. He went on to be a Rhodes Scholar at the University of Oxford. Today, his passion for Yale has become a family affair: his wife, Lynn Taliento, is a fellow member of the Class of 1990, although the couple did not meet until eight years after graduation. Warren and Taliento, who founded McKinsey’s philanthropy practice and is also a senior advisor at the Obama Foundation, have also instilled a love of the university in their two children, Amelia, age fourteen, and Noah, age eleven: “They can hear the excitement in our voices when we talk about the place, and we learn new things about campus together every time we visit.”

That, Warren maintains, is “one of the best parts about Yale: discovery and learning.” Simply put, “you don’t run out of discovering Yale.”
PETER SALOVEY ’86 PH.D.
Peter Salovey is the twenty-third president of Yale University and the Chris Argyris Professor of Psychology. After receiving an A.B. (psychology) and A.M. (sociology) from Stanford University in 1980 with departmental honors and university distinction, he earned his Ph.D. in psychology at Yale in 1986. He served as Yale’s provost from October 2008 to January 2013, and is the only Yale president to have served as dean of the graduate school (2003–2004), dean of Yale College (2004–2008), and provost (2008–2013). President Salovey has authored or edited over a dozen books translated into eleven languages and published hundreds of journal articles and essays in his field of social psychology. With John D. Mayer, he developed a broad framework called “emotional intelligence,” the theory that people have a wide range of measurable emotional skills that profoundly affect their thinking and action. In addition to teaching and mentoring scores of graduate students, President Salovey has won both the William Clyde DeVane Medal for Distinguished Scholarship and Teaching in Yale College and the Lex Hixon ’63 Prize for Teaching Excellence in the Social Sciences. He was elected to the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and to the National Academy of Medicine in 2013.

JOSHUA BEKENSTEIN ’80 B.A.
Joshua Bekenstein is a managing director of Bain Capital and has many years of experience both as a senior executive of a large investment firm and as a director of companies in various business sectors. After graduating from Yale and earning an M.B.A. from Harvard Business School, Mr. Bekenstein helped found Bain Capital, which has grown from its inception in 1984 into a private alternative asset management firm with more than 900 employees in ten offices in seven countries around the world. Prior to joining Bain Capital, Mr. Bekenstein spent several years doing strategic consulting at Bain & Company. He serves on the boards of Bright Horizons Family Solutions, BRP (Bombardier Recreational Products), Canada Goose, Michaels Stores, and TOMS Shoes. Philanthropically, Mr. Bekenstein chairs the board of the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute and is a member of the board of trustees of City Year. At Yale Mr. Bekenstein has served on the Yale Investments Committee and the School of Management Board of Advisors. He also served as an at-large member of the University Council, the co-chair of the Yale Tomorrow Campaign, and a member of the Yale Development Council. He was named successor trustee in 2013.

JEFFREY L. BEWKES ’74 B.A.

Jeffrey L. Bewkes is chairman and chief executive officer of Time Warner Inc., which comprises Warner Bros. studios; Home Box Office (HBO and Cinemax); and CNN, TNT, TBS, and Cartoon Network. After graduating from Yale and earning an M.B.A. from Stanford Graduate School of Business, he worked in banking for two years and then joined Home Box Office, where he rose through the ranks to become chief executive officer in 1995. In 2002 he became group chairman, responsible for Time Warner’s television, film, and music interests, and in 2006 he became chief operating officer for Time Warner overall. Mr. Bewkes serves on the board of the Partnership for New York City and on the advisory board for the Creative Coalition. Mr. Bewkes is also a member of the Business Council. A former member of the University Council, he was named successor trustee in 2006.

MAUREEN C. CHIQUET ’85 B.A.

Maureen Chiquet is the former global chief executive officer of Chanel, where she oversaw and coordinated activities worldwide and developed the organization’s Active & Conscious Leadership initiative. Ms. Chiquet joined Chanel, Inc., in 2003 and was named president of the company in the United States in 2004. She became the company’s first global CEO in 2007. Ms. Chiquet began her career at L’Oréal Paris in 1985. In 1988 she joined Gap, and in 1994 was recruited to help launch Old Navy. Over eight years, she advanced to executive vice president, growing the brand from thirty-five to 850 stores, before becoming president of Banana Republic in 2002. She has been recognized among Fortune’s International Power 50, Forbes’s 100 Most Powerful Women, The Wall Street Journal’s 50 Women to Watch, and Glamour magazine’s Women of the Year. She currently sits on the boards of Canada Goose, the New York Academy of Art, and the apparel company rag & bone. Her book, Beyond the Label: Women, Leadership, and Success on Our Own Terms, was released in April 2017. At Yale she served on the University Council Committee on Reputation, and is a member of the President’s Council on International Activities. She was appointed successor trustee in 2012.

Donna Dubinsky is CEO, board chair, and cofounder of Numenta, Inc., a software company creating fundamental technology designed to lead the coming era of machine intelligence. After graduating from Yale and earning an M.B.A. from Harvard Business School, she worked at Apple Computer and then as a founder of Claris Corporation. In 1992 she joined Jeff Hawkins at Palm Computing, serving as president and chief executive officer. The handheld computer PalmPilot, introduced four years later, became the fastest-selling computer and consumer electronics product in history at the time. In 1998 Ms. Dubinsky and Mr. Hawkins founded Handspring, Inc., creator of the Treo Smartphone, which set the standard for next-generation phones. Handspring merged in 2003 with Palm, where Ms. Dubinsky served as a director until early 2009. She and Mr. Hawkins founded Numenta in 2005. At Yale she served as a member of the University Council. Ms. Dubinsky was named successor trustee in 2006 and senior trustee in 2016.
Charles W. Goodyear IV is the president of Goodyear Capital Corporation and Goodyear Investment Company and the former chief executive officer of BHP Billiton, the world’s largest diversified resources company. After graduating from Yale, he earned an M.B.A. from the Wharton School at the University of Pennsylvania in 1983. He joined BHP Billiton as chief financial officer in 1999, was appointed chief development officer in 2001, and became CEO in 2003. Mr. Goodyear held previous positions as executive vice president at Kidder, Peabody & Co., a Wall Street investment bank, and senior vice president and chief financial officer of Freeport-McMoRan Inc., a natural resources company. Mr. Goodyear served as CEO-designate of Temasek Holdings, an investment company wholly owned by the Singapore Minister for Finance, from March until August 2009, and also served on Temasek’s board from February through August 2009. He is also director of several companies and organizations. At Yale Mr. Goodyear served as a member of the Yale Tomorrow Campaign Committee and currently serves on the President’s Council on International Activities and the advisory board of the Jackson Institute for Global Affairs. He was named successor trustee in 2011.

Kate Walsh is president and chief executive officer of Boston Medical Center (BMC), a private, not-for-profit academic medical center that disproportionately serves low-income patients and anchors the BMC Health System with an operating revenue of $2.8 billion. In her role, Ms. Walsh leads the BMC and the Boston Medical Center HealthNet Plan, which provides health insurance and access to care to nearly 300,000 low-income individuals. In partnership with the dean of the Boston University School of Medicine, she oversees the school’s faculty practice plan. After earning her undergraduate and graduate degrees from Yale, Ms. Walsh served in a variety of positions in New York City hospitals. She returned to her home city of Boston in 1988, first as an assistant general director in medical services at Massachusetts General Hospital (MGH). During a fourteen-year tenure at MGH she advanced twice, ultimately becoming senior vice president of medical services and of the MGH Cancer Center. Prior to her current role, Ms. Walsh served as executive vice president and chief operating officer of Brigham Health and as chief operating officer of Novartis Institutes for BioMedical Research. She serves as board chair of the Massachusetts Hospital Association and director of the Boston Public Health Commission, the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston, and Pine Street Inn, a Boston-based organization that supports and advocates for homeless individuals. Ms. Walsh has served on the University Council and was a non-trustee member of the Yale Corporation Committee on the School of Medicine prior to her election as alumni fellow in 2017.
DOUGLAS A. WARNER III ’68 B.A.

During his thirty-three-year career in banking and financial services, Douglas A. Warner rose to be chair of J.P. Morgan Chase & Co., where he was first employed shortly after graduating from Yale. In 1995 he was named the youngest chief executive officer in J.P. Morgan’s history, and he was chair and CEO until J.P. Morgan merged with Chase Manhattan in 2000. Following the merger, Mr. Warner served as chair of the board of the combined enterprise until his retirement in 2001. Since 1998 he has been chair of the board of Memorial Sloan Kettering Cancer Center. He is a former director of General Electric, Anheuser-Busch, and Motorola. Prior to being named a successor trustee in 2008, Mr. Warner was a non-trustee member of two Yale Corporation committees, serving on the Investments Committee since 2001 and on the School of Medicine Ad Hoc Committee from 2001 to 2007.
