Yale is committed to improving the world today and for future generations through outstanding research and scholarship, education, preservation, and practice.

Yale educates aspiring leaders worldwide who serve all sectors of society. We carry out this mission through the free exchange of ideas in an ethical, interdependent, and diverse community of faculty, staff, students, and alumni.
April 2022

Dear Yale Graduate,

Our university has a historic obligation to create knowledge, discover new ways of understanding, and demonstrate the importance of taking actions that are rooted in research and scholarship. The stakes for this work could not be higher. The world needs light and truth rather than “spin,” and the world needs the very best from Yale.

The university’s board of trustees, known formally as the Yale Corporation, plays a key role in furthering Yale’s contributions to society and ensuring its continued excellence as a global research university deeply committed to teaching and learning. Over the course of my time as president, this small yet diverse group of dedicated volunteer fiduciaries has helped me to develop Yale’s academic strategy in the arts, humanities, sciences, and social sciences; draw talented students to our campus by expanding financial aid throughout the university; recruit exceptional scholars and educators to our faculty across the disciplines; and carry forward the university’s mission of leadership and service to society.

The trustees are vital and active partners in the work to strengthen our university and serve the world around us. By participating in the alumni fellow election, you join generations of Yalies past and present in shaping our collective future. Thank you in advance for embracing this responsibility by casting your vote.

Sincerely,

Peter Salovey
President
Chris Argyris Professor of Psychology
The Yale Corporation, or board of trustees, is the university’s principal governing body. As fiduciaries, the trustees ensure that Yale’s academic and administrative leadership are guided by sound policies and practices, and equipped with adequate resources, to further Yale’s mission. In this work, they balance the needs of today’s faculty, students, alumni, and staff with those of future generations, and ensure the well-being and excellence of the university.

The Corporation is a uniquely active and small group that includes the president of the university and sixteen Yale graduates: ten appointed successor trustees and six elected alumni fellows. Successor trustees and alumni fellows carry the same responsibilities and duties. In addition, the governor and lieutenant governor of Connecticut are board members ex officio.

Drawing from their wide-ranging areas of expertise and common commitment to Yale, trustees address issues of strategic importance and offer guidance to support the stewardship of the university. The Corporation meets multiple times each year with Yale’s academic and administrative leaders to review, discuss, and vote on matters such as faculty and senior leadership appointments, the conferral of degrees, major building projects, and operating and capital budgets.

During and between meetings, the trustees connect with members of the Yale community, including faculty, students, alumni, and staff. When they are on campus, some do so formally, in regular meetings with student government and faculty, and others informally, at lunches, university teas, and campus events. Off campus, trustees meet with alumni at a variety of small and large gatherings, engaging on issues of importance to Yale and higher education in general.

THE ALUMNI FELLOW ELECTION

The Yale Corporation’s six alumni fellows are chosen by their fellow graduates. Each year, the university’s alumni are charged with electing a new trustee for a term of six years.

Voting Eligibility and Deadline
According to the University Charter, all graduates of Yale College who have held their degrees for five years or more, all alumni of the graduate and professional schools, and all recipients of Yale honorary degrees are eligible to vote in the election. The polls close at 11:59 p.m. EDT on May 22, 2022. Yale has engaged Election Services Corporation of Melville, New York, to tabulate the votes. Only one vote per person will be recorded.

2022 Candidates for Election
The Alumni Fellow Nominating Committee, a standing committee of the Yale Alumni Association, is composed of graduates from across the university’s schools and departments, the secretary of the university, and the vice president for alumni affairs and development. Each year, the committee reviews nominations it receives from alumni around the world, and selects for the alumni fellow election ballot exceptional leaders who have the knowledge and skills to serve Yale as trustees. To create diverse and well-balanced leadership, the committee identifies individuals whose expertise and experience complement those of current trustees.
After soliciting and reviewing nominations, the committee has selected the following individuals for the 2022 ballot:

JESSICA R. HERRERA-FLANIGAN
'92 B.A.
Vienna, Virginia

FRED KRUPP
'75 B.S.
Norwalk, Connecticut

DANIEL H. WEISS
'85 M.P.P.M.
New York, New York

The candidates’ biographies—as well as those of the current trustees—are included in the following pages. The individual receiving the highest number of votes will become the newest alumni fellow of the Yale Corporation, serving a six-year term beginning July 1, 2022.

Identifying Future Candidates
The Alumni Fellow Nominating Committee encourages all alumni to suggest qualified graduates for its consideration in future elections. Nominations may be submitted at alumni.yale.edu/alumni-fellow-nomination-form.
For Jessica Herrera-Flanigan, the road to a nearly thirty-year career as an expert in corporate affairs and legal advising began with the drive to New Haven from her childhood home in East Texas. An aspiring writer, she came to Yale to study poetry and journalism; rose to the position of city editor at the Yale Daily News; and discovered a passion for American studies—in which she received her bachelor’s degree, with distinction, in 1992. In college she learned to seek out and recognize the interconnections among disciplines, spheres, and communities; this perspective would shape Herrera-Flanigan’s subsequent career, which has followed the thread of emerging technologies and policy areas.

Today, as Twitter’s vice president of public policy and philanthropy for the Americas since 2020, Herrera-Flanigan oversees the social networking service’s government affairs, crisis response, thought leadership, and community engagement in the United States, Brazil, Canada, and Latin America. She also spearheads the company’s global social impact work, including the successful launch of Twitter’s first Global Impact Report—covering corporate responsibility, sustainability, and philanthropy—in 2021. She is an inaugural member, and current chair, of the board of the U.S. Center for SafeSport, an independent nonprofit organization created by the United States Olympic Committee in 2015 and officially authorized by Congress in 2017 to prevent and respond to all forms of abuse and misconduct within the U.S. Olympic and Paralympic movement.

“I like being at the front end of things, thinking strategically about how to build things,” Herrera-Flanigan explains. After graduating from Yale, she went on to Harvard Law School, earning her J.D. in 1995. During the summer after her first year of law school, she opted to forgo an opportunity in New York City investment banking and instead turned back toward her interest in American studies. Working in South Dakota for the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe Attorney General’s Office, she supported developing issues of Indian law and helped to write a tax code for the tribe. It was, she says, “one of the most defining moments of my life,” showing her the value and meaning of contributing to new policy development. The experience stood her in good stead when, several years later, as senior counsel for the criminal division of the Department of Justice, her first day on the job coincided with the emergence of the email-borne Melissa virus; she was asked to focus on the case and soon cemented her place as an expert on issues of computer crime and cybersecurity. She has since served as staff director and general counsel for the House of Representatives’ Committee on Homeland Security (making her the first Latina staff director of a congressional committee); as a partner and co-owner of Monument Policy Group, a strategic consulting firm; and as executive vice president for government and corporate affairs at Univision Communications Inc., where she led the creation—and for three years served as president—of the Univision Foundation, a public charity.
Herrera-Flanigan has received numerous career honors, including multi-year recognition by CableFax as one of the most powerful women and most influential minorities in cable, a special award from the Organization of American States/Friends of the Art Museum of the Americas in 2018, the Multichannel News Wonder Woman Award in 2017, the Hispanic Heritage Foundation NFL Award in 2016, and the Department of Justice’s Special Achievement Award (2000) and Meritorious Award (2001). In 2021, Latino Leaders magazine named her among its most influential Latinas of the year. She is on the board of the Peabody Awards, which recognize achievements in broadcasting across multiple media platforms; is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations; and previously served on the board of the National Association of Broadcasters. At Yale she is a member of both the University Council and the Corporation Committee on Honorary Degrees.

Herrera-Flanigan holds a black belt in tae kwon do and enjoys writing poetry. She and her entrepreneur/engineer/inventor husband, Tom, are the parents of a nine-year-old daughter and an eleven-year-old son.

In his thirty-seven years leading the Environmental Defense Fund (EDF), Fred Krupp has guided the organization toward a clear objective: “Finding the Ways that Work.” The roots of that motto, he explains, reach all the way back to a second-floor classroom in Yale’s Becton Center. As an undergraduate in Professor Charles Walker’s course, “Environment and Man,” Krupp was struck by the professor’s assertion that environmental challenges are solvable, once people and societies agree to solve them. In this philosophy, he found not only an inspiration that led him to dive into the readings for the next week as soon as the first class had ended—he also found his life’s calling. Says Krupp: “Walker’s insight became my passion.”

As EDF’s president, Krupp has translated that passion into action. One of the world’s most influential environmental organizations, EDF has grown during Krupp’s tenure from forty-five employees to more than 850, from an annual budget of $3 million to over $200 million, and from forty thousand members to 2.5 million. In recent years EDF has been instrumental in calling attention to the problems posed by methane, leading to the November 2021 commitment by more than one hundred countries to reduce methane pollution by 30 percent by 2030. The organization has also been a visible force behind the move away from combustion-engine cars: General Motors, announcing in January 2021 that it would transition to manufacturing electric vehicles exclusively, cited its work with EDF to develop its plans. EDF’s long-term impact can be seen thirty years after it spurred amendments to the Clean Air Act, signed in 1990: since then, acid rain pollution in the United States has dropped by 90 percent. At the heart of this success has been a pragmatic approach grounded in science that uses market forces—including innovative collaborations with corporate partners—to protect the environment.

After completing his bachelor of science at Yale, Krupp earned his J.D. from the University of Michigan Law School in 1978. He then returned to New Haven with the idea of starting a new environmental group. As co-founder of the Connecticut Fund for the Environment—now Save the Sound—he worked with 120 Yale students to establish the state’s first-ever organization of its kind. To this day, the group engages students and the wider community in protecting the environment and public health. Meanwhile, Krupp has continued to come to campus to speak at the Law School, School of the Environment, and School of Management, and to visit with students in Pierson, his undergraduate residential college. For over a decade he has served on the Leadership Council of the School of the Environment, where two EDF donors endowed a scholarship in environmental studies in his name. “Seeing how motivated students are today to solve these problems and not resign themselves to a degraded future—in a way,” he says, “that’s been as inspiring as Professor Walker was to me all those years ago.”

An avid rower, Krupp won a gold medal in the 2006 World Rowing Masters Regatta sponsored by FISA, the international rowing federation. He lives with his wife in Connecticut and is a father of three and grandfather of three.

Daniel Weiss has made a career of bringing the world of culture and ideas together with the realm of management and leadership—and, he says, “It all started at Yale.” In 1983, after completing his bachelor of arts (in art history and psychology) at George Washington University and a master of arts (in medieval and modern art) at Johns Hopkins University, he arrived at the School of Management to pursue a master’s in public and private management. The connections he made at Yale, and the opportunities he found there, would have a profound impact on his subsequent trajectory from management consultant to doctoral candidate (earning his Ph.D. in Western Medieval and Byzantine art from Johns Hopkins in 1992) to the highest ranks of nonprofit administration.

In 2015—following a professorship and deanship at Johns Hopkins and presidencies at Lafayette College and Haverford College—Weiss joined the Metropolitan Museum of Art as its president and chief operating officer, rising to his current role as president and chief executive. officer two years later. The Met is the largest and one of the most diverse art museums in the world, with approximately two million objects in its collection, seven million visitors annually, and two thousand employees. During his tenure at its helm, Weiss has brought the museum from annual deficits to a balanced budget; shaped its response to the COVID-19 pandemic; led transformative changes around issues of racial equity and social justice; and initiated a project to create a new wing for modern art.

Weiss also remains a working scholar and author: he has written on such varied topics as higher education, medieval art and the Crusades, the resistance movement in the Second World War, and America’s involvement in Vietnam. His forthcoming book on the place of art museums as civic institutions within democratic societies, Why the Museum Matters, will be published this fall. He is an elected member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences; a longstanding trustee and board vice-chair of the Samuel H. Kress Foundation, which advances the study, conservation, and enjoyment of European art; and a member or former member of numerous boards, including those of the Posse Foundation, the nonprofit Library of America, and the Wallace Foundation. He has served for numerous years as chair of the District IV Selection Committee for the Rhodes Scholarship and, at Yale, is a member of both the University Council and the School of Management Board of Advisors.

Recognition of Weiss’s achievements has spanned from pedagogical excellence (including Johns Hopkins’s three major teaching awards: the Distinguished Faculty Award, in 1994; the Alumni Association Excellence in Teaching Award, in 1996; and the George E. Owen Teaching Award, in 2003) to management (the School of Management’s Leadership in Business and Society Award, in 2018) to civic leadership (George Washington University’s Bicentennial Monumental Alumni Award, in 2021, and City & State
New York’s Fifty over 50 Lifetime Achievement Award, in January 2022). But perhaps more important than these honors has been the chance to come full circle and serve as a mentor and advisor to subsequent generations.

“There’s nothing more rewarding than going back to Yale and meeting people who are in that moment in their lives where the world of possibilities is before them,” Weiss affirms before describing a moment of mentorship from his own time as a student. At twenty-four, when he was conducting an independent study in museum leadership during his studies at the School of Management, he had the chance to meet with the president of the Metropolitan Museum of Art at the time – never imagining that one day he would hold that same office.

Weiss and his spouse of forty-two years, health care attorney Sandra Jarva Weiss, are the parents of two adult sons.

He has appeared frequently on the Forbes Midas List and is recognized as a leading technology investor. Mr. Sze joined Greylock in 2000 and served as its senior managing partner from 2012 to 2017. Known for his expertise in partnering with entrepreneurs to deliver breakthrough technology to consumers, he invested in Facebook when it was still a closed network of seven million college students, and served as a board observer from 2006 to 2012. He was a board member at LinkedIn from 2004 through its IPO and subsequent acquisition by Microsoft in 2016. He sits on the boards of Nextdoor and Discord, and his other investments have included Roblox, Bytedance/TikTok, and Pandora Media. Mr. Sze is also a member of the board of advisors for Northern Lights Venture Capital. Prior to Greylock, he was an executive at Excite, one of the first Internet search engines, and its successor Excite@Home. He also held positions in the games industry, at Electronic Arts and Crystal Dynamics, focused on product marketing and development. In addition to his professional responsibilities, he is a trustee of The Rockefeller University. Mr. Sze serves as a member of the Stanford Graduate School of Business’s Entrepreneurial Company of the Year (ENCORE) Award Committee and the Stanford Interdisciplinary Life Sciences Council. Mr. Sze holds a B.A. in economics and political science from Yale and an M.B.A. from Stanford University. At Yale, he served on the President’s Advisory Committee on Digital Yale and was appointed a successor trustee in 2018.

Marta L. Tellado ’02 Ph.D.
Marta L. Tellado is president and chief executive officer of Consumer Reports, an independent, nonprofit member organization that works with consumers to foster truth, transparency, and fairness in the marketplace. Throughout her career, Ms. Tellado has sought transformative solutions to complex challenges facing modern society. She has worked extensively with policymakers in Washington, D.C., in both government and nonprofit organizations. Since becoming its president and CEO in 2014, she has led Consumer Reports—the largest nonprofit consumer organization in the world—by uniting its rigorous research, consumer insights, journalism, and policy expertise to inform purchase decisions, improve the products and services that businesses deliver, and drive regulatory and fair competitive practices. Prior to joining Consumer Reports, she was vice president for global communications at the Ford Foundation from 2004 to 2014. In that role, she oversaw the foundation’s strategic communications and advocacy on a range of issues in the United States and around the world, including economic fairness, free and fair access to an open internet, and civil rights. She also founded and directed the first bipartisan domestic public policy forum at the Aspen Institute and was named among the “Top Women in Media” by Folio: magazine in 2018. Ms. Tellado earned her bachelor’s degree in 1981 from Fairleigh Dickinson University, where she served as a trustee from 2013 - 2022, and her Ph.D. from Yale in 2002. Ms. Tellado, who also has been a member of the University Council, was named a successor trustee in 2022.

Annette Thomas ’93 Ph.D.

Annette Thomas is a senior advisor to General Atlantic, a global growth equity firm, and a non-executive director on the board of the global education company Pearson PLC. She has overseen some of the leading academic publishing, media, and data analytics companies in the world. A trained scientist, Ms. Thomas earned her undergraduate degree from Harvard and a Ph.D. in cell biology and neuroscience from Yale. She has served as managing director of Nature Publishing Group, the world’s premier scientific publisher, and as chief executive officer of Macmillan Publishers Ltd. Later, she was CEO of Web of Science Group—which, as part of the analytics company Clarivate, provides insights and analytics to researchers and research institutions worldwide—and, most recently, CEO of Guardian Media Group, the parent company of The Guardian and *The Observer newspapers. She has overseen numerous business transformations with a view to creating long-term sustainable growth on a global scale. Ms. Thomas was recognized with the Kim Scott Walwyn Prize for exceptional women in publishing and is a recipient of the Wilbur Lucius Cross Medal, awarded by Yale's Graduate School of Arts and Sciences. She has served as a member of the Board of Scientific Counselors for the National Center for Biotechnology Information and on the board of Creative Commons. She was elected an alumni fellow in 2016.

David A. Thomas ’78 B.A., ’84 M.A., ’86 Ph.D.
David A. Thomas is president of Morehouse College. A scholar recognized for his work at the intersection of race, careers, and organizations, he has channeled his academic expertise into a distinguished career in higher education. During his presidency Thomas has led an unprecedented push to expand the college’s endowment and outreach. He has also spurred Morehouse to new levels of eminence in the STEM disciplines, reinforced the college’s status as a national leader in combating institutional racism, and spearheaded a strategic plan that includes a $500 million capital campaign, the second-largest fundraising effort attempted by an HBCU. Prior to his current appointment, Thomas held numerous faculty and leadership positions: as assistant professor of management at the University of Pennsylvania’s Wharton School, as the H. Naylor Fitzhugh Professor of Business Administration at Harvard University, and as dean and William R. Berkley Chair of the Georgetown University McDonough School of Business. Thomas is widely recognized for his expertise in organizational and leadership development. Throughout his career he has consulted for a range of organizations, including many Fortune 500 companies. He serves on the boards of the American Red Cross, Commonfund, and DTE Energy, and is a co-founder of Harvard Divinity School’s Urban Ministries Executive Program as well as the Black Corporate Directors Conference. He has received both the George R. Terry Book Award and the Award for Contributions to the Theory and Practice of Mentoring from the Academy of Management, and was honored with the Beacon Award from the National Executive Forum in 2012. At Yale he served on the School of Management Board of Advisors. He was elected an alumni fellow in 2021.

Kathleen Elizabeth Walsh ’77 B.A., ’79 M.P.H.
Kate Walsh is president and chief executive officer of Boston Medical Center (BMC), a private, not-for-profit academic medical center that disproportionately serves low-income patients and anchors the BMC Health System with an operating revenue of $2.8 billion. In her role, Ms. Walsh leads the BMC and the Boston Medical Center HealthNet Plan, which provides health insurance and access to care to nearly three hundred thousand low-income individuals. In partnership with the dean of the Boston University School of Medicine, she oversees the school’s faculty practice plan. After earning her undergraduate and graduate degrees from Yale, Ms. Walsh served in a variety of positions in New York City hospitals. She returned to her home city of Boston in 1988, first as an assistant general director in medical services at Massachusetts General Hospital (MGH). During a fourteen-year tenure at MGH she advanced twice, ultimately becoming senior vice president of medical services and of the MGH Cancer Center. Prior to her current role, Ms. Walsh served as executive vice president and chief operating officer of Brigham Health and as chief operating officer of Novartis Institutes for BioMedical Research. She is chair of the Council of Teaching Hospitals and Health Systems for the Association of American Medical Colleges and previously served as chair of the Massachusetts Hospital Association. She is also a director of the Boston Public Health Commission, the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston, and Pine Street Inn, a Boston-based organization that supports and advocates for homeless individuals. Ms. Walsh has served on the University Council and was a non-trustee member of the Yale Corporation Committee on the School of Medicine prior to her election as an alumni fellow in 2017.
Michael Warren ’90 B.A.

Michael Warren is the global managing director of Albright Stonebridge Group, a business strategy firm he co-founded in 2009, where he advises clients at the intersection of the public, private, and social sectors. For the past two decades, Mr. Warren has built a career as a leader in financial services, international business, and government policy. A longtime resident of Washington, D.C., he is also known for his engagement in local and national politics. Prior to establishing Albright Stonebridge Group, he worked at McKinsey & Company, focusing on technology and financial institution practices. He was executive director of the National Economic Council at the White House under President Clinton, and served in the Office of the Secretary of the U.S. Department of Labor. During President Obama’s first term, Mr. Warren became senior advisor in the White House Presidential Personnel Office, overseeing appointments for government economic agencies. President Obama also appointed him to the Overseas Private Investment Corporation (OPIC) board of directors. Mr. Warren is a director of Commonfund, an asset management firm serving nonprofit organizations, and of Walker & Dunlop, a commercial real estate finance company. At Yale, he serves on the School of Management Board of Advisors and on the President’s Council on International Activities. Mr. Warren received a B.A. in history from Yale and a degree in philosophy, politics, and economics from Balliol College at Oxford University, where he was a Rhodes Scholar. A former member of the University Council, he was elected an alumni fellow in 2018.
