Yale is committed to improving the world today and for future generations through outstanding research and scholarship, education, preservation, and practice.

Yale educates aspiring leaders worldwide who serve all sectors of society. We carry out this mission through the free exchange of ideas in an ethical, interdependent, and diverse community of faculty, staff, students, and alumni.
April 2023

Dear Yale Graduate,

The university’s board of trustees, known formally as the Yale Corporation, plays a key role in furthering Yale’s contributions to society and ensuring its continued excellence as a global research university deeply committed to teaching and learning.

The trustees are vital and active partners in the work to strengthen our university and serve the world around us. Over the course of my time as president, this small yet diverse group of dedicated volunteer fiduciaries has helped me to develop Yale’s academic strategy in the arts, humanities, sciences, and social sciences; welcome talented students to our campus by expanding financial aid throughout the university; recruit exceptional scholars and educators to our faculty; and carry forward the university’s mission.

By participating in the alumni fellow election, you join generations of Yalies past and present in shaping our collective future. Thank you in advance for embracing this responsibility by casting your vote.

Sincerely,

Peter Salovey
President
Chris Argyris Professor of Psychology
THE YALE CORPORATION

The Yale Corporation, or board of trustees, is the university’s principal governing body. As fiduciaries, the trustees ensure that Yale’s academic and administrative leadership are guided by sound policies and practices, and equipped with adequate resources, to further Yale’s mission. In this work, they balance the needs of today’s faculty, students, alumni, and staff with those of future generations, and ensure the well-being and excellence of the university.

The Corporation is a uniquely active and small group that includes the president of the university and sixteen Yale graduates: ten appointed successor trustees and six elected alumni fellows. Successor trustees and alumni fellows carry the same responsibilities and duties. In addition, the governor and lieutenant governor of Connecticut are board members ex officio.

Drawing from their wide-ranging areas of expertise and common commitment to Yale, trustees address issues of strategic importance and offer guidance to support the stewardship of the university. The Corporation meets multiple times each year with Yale’s academic and administrative leaders to review, discuss, and vote on matters such as faculty and senior leadership appointments, the conferral of degrees, major building projects, and operating and capital budgets.

During and between meetings, the trustees connect with members of the Yale community, including faculty, students, alumni, and staff. When they are on campus, some do so formally, in regular meetings with student government and faculty, and others informally, at lunches, university teas, and campus events. Off campus, trustees meet with alumni at a variety of small and large gatherings, engaging on issues of importance to Yale and higher education in general.

THE ALUMNI FELLOW ELECTION

The Yale Corporation’s six alumni fellows are chosen by their fellow graduates. Each year, the university’s alumni are charged with electing a new trustee for a term of six years.

Voting Eligibility and Deadline
According to the University Charter, all graduates of Yale College who have held their degrees for five years or more, all alumni of the graduate and professional schools, and all recipients of Yale honorary degrees are eligible to vote in the election. The polls close at 11:59 p.m. EDT on May 21, 2023. Yale has engaged Election Services Corporation of Melville, New York, to tabulate the votes. Only one vote per person will be recorded.

2023 Candidates for Election
The Alumni Fellow Nominating Committee, a standing committee of the Yale Alumni Association, is composed of graduates from across the university’s schools and departments, the secretary of the university, and the vice president for alumni affairs and development. Each year, the committee reviews nominations it receives from alumni around the world, and selects for the alumni fellow election ballot exceptional leaders who have the knowledge and skills to serve Yale as trustees. To create diverse and well-balanced leadership, the committee identifies individuals whose expertise and experience complement those of current trustees.
After soliciting and reviewing nominations, the committee has selected the following individuals for the 2023 ballot:

MARYANA ISKANDER
'03 J.D.
Johannesburg, South Africa

LAUREN TYLER
'84 B.A.
Stamford, Connecticut

The candidates’ biographies—as well as those of the current trustees— are included in the following pages. The individual receiving the highest number of votes will become the newest alumni fellow of the Yale Corporation, serving a six-year term beginning July 1, 2023.

Identifying Future Candidates
The Alumni Fellow Nominating Committee encourages all alumni to suggest qualified graduates for its consideration in future elections. Nominations may be submitted at alumni.yale.edu/alumni-fellow-nomination-form.
Maryana Iskander has built a wide-ranging global career around two core values: the desire to break down systemic barriers to opportunity, and an interest in forging solutions through collaboration. In the twenty years since she graduated from Yale Law School, Iskander has let those principles guide her to roles in higher education administration (as advisor to the president of Rice University), women’s health (as chief operating officer of Planned Parenthood), and youth unemployment (as chief executive officer of Harambee Youth Employment Accelerator, a social enterprise based in South Africa and Rwanda). “If I think about all the jobs that I’ve had,” Iskander reflects, “the overarching question has been: What do you devote your time and talents to that will make the world a fairer and better place for others?”

Today, as chief executive of the Wikimedia Foundation, Iskander is at the helm of the non-profit behind Wikipedia, one of the world’s top five websites. (More than 1.5 billion unique devices visit Wikipedia and its parent foundation’s sites every month.) The ubiquitous online encyclopedia relies on a staff of over 700 across more than fifty countries, supporting a corps of over 250,000 volunteers who contribute content and edit in 300-plus languages. Since starting as Wikimedia’s CEO in early 2022, Iskander is developing a strategic plan for the organization, leading a recalibration of its values, and advancing the work of volunteer communities around the world. For Iskander and her colleagues, the stakes could not be higher: Wikipedia has been called “the last best place left on the internet,” a bulwark against misinformation and disinformation—an enterprise driven by a public mission, as she describes it, “to increase the veracity and capacity of human knowledge.”

It was the pursuit of knowledge, a love of “learning and education for its own sake,” that brought Iskander to New Haven to pursue her J.D. through the Paul & Daisy Soros Fellowship for New Americans. Already several years removed from her bachelor’s degree (magna cum laude in sociology from Rice University, where she was a Harry S. Truman Scholar), she had been a Rhodes Scholar at the University of Oxford and a strategy consultant at McKinsey & Company. At Yale Law School, she was a member of the first slight-majority female class, a milestone that inspired Iskander and her colleagues to undertake a comprehensive research effort to illuminate the experiences of their generation of women law students; that project ultimately would lead to the publication, in the Yale Journal of Law & Feminism, of Iskander’s 2006 article (co-authored with Sari Bashi ’97 B.A., ’03 J.D.), “Why Legal Education is Failing Women.” Drawn to the intersection of theory and practice, she volunteered with the school’s Jerome N. Frank Legal Services Organization, representing female prisoners and low-income tenants and providing legal assistance to local non-profits. Upon graduation, she completed a judicial clerkship on the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.
Iskander is a member of the board of Co-Impact, a global philanthropic collaborative; the Henry Crown Fellowship at the Aspen Institute; and, at Yale, the President’s Council on International Activities, engaging in efforts to expand access to a Yale education for students from across the African continent. She has served on the U.S. board of directors for the Nelson Mandela Children’s Hospital and is a member of the Young Presidents’ Organization. For her leadership and service, she has been recognized with the Rice University Distinguished Alumni Award (2020) and the Skoll Award for Social Entrepreneurship (2019). In 2018, accompanied by both of her parents, she returned to Yale’s campus to receive the Yale Law Women Alumni Achievement Award and share her perspective with current law students—an experience that ranks among her most cherished memories as an alumna.

Iskander, who divides her time between the United States, where Wikimedia is headquartered, and her home in South Africa, is the aunt of two nephews, Maximus Iskander Porter and Roman Hawkins Iskander Porter.
Throughout a three-decade career in finance, Lauren Tyler’s foremost priority has always been “to lead with the heart” while achieving the institution’s goals and carrying out its mission. Her interest in finance struck early: Tyler, who excelled in math throughout her school years, bought her first share of public stock at age fifteen. Since completing her B.A. in American studies at Yale in 1984 and an M.B.A. from Harvard in 1988, she has worked in investment banking, private equity, and most recently in senior corporate roles at the world’s largest banking institution.

For the past twenty-three years, Tyler has worked at JPMorgan Chase (or at a JPMC private equity affiliate), where her passion for the interpersonal side of the business is renowned. She has made building teams and relationships a priority, and she has excelled in her efforts. As the firm’s head of human resources for assets and wealth management, she leads a global team focused on attracting, developing, and retaining talent for a division that encompasses 26,000 employees, $18 billion in revenue, and $4 trillion in client assets. She also oversees HR for the firm’s employees in India and the Philippines. She has made mental health awareness and wellness education a core priority, establishing forums for employee conversation and implementing managerial training programs. Prior to her current role, Tyler co-led private equity co-investments for JPMorgan’s investment banking business, ran the firm’s investor relations in the aftermath of the 2008 financial crisis, and was the company’s global general auditor during the period of increased industry regulatory scrutiny that ensued. In that role, she spearheaded significant improvements to the firm’s internal audit process, thereby enhancing the company’s capacity to manage risk.

Throughout her career, Tyler has opened the dialogue about differences, improved education on diversity, and increased representation at every title level. Tyler advocated for inclusion long before it became a formal part of her portfolio. “Diversity has been a theme throughout my career—I’ve always been a mentor, always been involved, always been a big recruiter of those from underrepresented backgrounds.”

Tyler credits her Yale experience with awakening her curiosity and compassion: as an undergraduate, she reveled in the opportunity to forge friendships with classmates from vastly different environments. She cites her time at Harvard for developing her managerial and leadership capabilities—training that prepared her for a broad range of positions.

Alongside her professional work, Tyler has an abiding commitment to service that was ignited by her alma mater: “Yale really leapfrogged my life, and I have always enjoyed giving back.” Her experiences as a scholar-athlete on the women’s lacrosse team, a devoted Ezra Stiles resident, and a first-year counselor resulted in a deep and ongoing sense of community engagement. She is a member of the For Humanity campaign committee, the Parents Leadership Council, and the Yale Cancer Center Director’s Council, and has served on the Alumni Schools Committee and several reunion gift committees. Beyond Yale, she is actively involved in nature conservation and sits on the board of the World Wildlife Fund. She is also a member of the Executive Leadership Council, an organization dedicated to increasing the number of Black executives globally. She has participated in the Federal Advisory Committee for Diversity in the Digital World, which made recommendations to increase minority ownership in media. Tyler also has extensive experience on both public and private company boards of directors.

For her accomplishments, Tyler has been recognized by Institutional Investor as the best investor relations professional in the large-cap bank category and received the Harlem YMCA’s Black Achievers in Industry Award. A passionate triathlete, she was invited to compete in the USA Triathlon Age-Group National Championships in 2018, 2019, and 2021. (As a cyclist she also has completed multiple century rides in support of Yale cancer research.) She and her husband, a community college professor, have five children; the youngest is a member of the Yale College Class of 2024.
